WAN BADARUDDIN CHE WAN BASOR ALI
v. CIMB BANK BHD & ANOR

HIGH COURT MALAYA, ALOR SETAR
JOHAN LEE KIEN HOW J
[SUIT NO: KA-22NCC-7-06-2022]
4 AUGUST 2025

Abstract – The matter on the interpretation, validation and application of a survivorship clause of a joint fixed deposit account falls within the realm of banking and contract law, which are explicitly governed under the Federal List, Ninth Schedule of the Federal Constitution. Civil courts are equipped with the jurisdiction to hear the matter and not the Shariah Court, even if the matter involves Shariah principles.

JURISDICTION: Courts – Jurisdiction – Application to refer issues to Shariah High Court from civil High Court – Application pursuant to suit initiated in civil High Court for breach of contract – Breach of survivorship clause of joint fixed deposit account – Whether fell under jurisdiction of civil High Court or Shariah High Court – Whether corporate entity has capacity to profess any religion – Whether Shariah Court's decision could affect right or property of non-Muslim – Whether issue on interpretation, validity and applicability of survivorship clause fell under realm of banking and contract law, hence, under jurisdiction of civil courts – Whether issues should be referred to Shariah Advisory Council of Bank Negara Malaysia

The present application was concerned with the estate of the Almarhum DYTM Tunku Hj Abdul Malik Ibnu Almarhum Sultan Badlishah ('estate') ('late DYTM Tunku Malik'). At the age of 82, the late DYTM Tunku Malik had opened a joint fixed deposit account ('account') with the first defendant, a bank. The plaintiff was named as the joint account holder. Less than a year after the opening, the late DYTM Tunku Malik was diagnosed with dementia of alzheimer type and severe brain atrophy, along with other serious medical conditions. Subsequently, the late DYTM Tunku Malik passed away, and upon the written instruction of the Jemaah Pemangku Sultan Kedah, the first defendant froze the account. Nearly three years after the passing of the late DYTM Tunku Malik, the plaintiff had remained silent and had not filed any claim for the monies in the account ('monies'). However, on the date of the appointment of the second defendant as the administratrix of the estate, the plaintiff had demanded the first defendant to release the monies to him. The demand was rejected by the first defendant. The second defendant later obtained an order from the Alor Setar High Court which instructed the account to be inserted into the amended list of assets of

A the estate. That prompted the plaintiff to file a suit against the first and second defendants, seeking a declaration and order that the plaintiff was entitled to withdraw all the monies in the account ('suit'). Hence, the present application to refer several issues to the Kedah Shariah High Court ('Shariah Court') pursuant to art. 121(1A) of the Federal Constitution ('FC') and/or s.
B 24A(1) of the Courts of Judicature Act 1964 and/or s. 13(3)(b) of the Shariah Courts (Kedah Darul Aman) Enactment 2008 ('2008 Enactment') and/or O. 92 r. 4 of the Rules of Court 2012 ('application') by the second defendant. Those issues were: (i) whether the monies ought to be distributed to the heirs according to faraid and Islamic inheritance law; (ii) whether regarding the
C monies, there was any valid form of gift (alang or pemberian) made by the late DYTM Tunku Malik to the plaintiff; and (iii) whether the 'survivorship clause' contained in the terms of the opening of the account applicable to the estate according to Shariah law ('issues'). In resisting the application, the plaintiff submitted that, inter alia: (i) the Shariah Court lacked the jurisdiction to hear the issues because: (a) the first defendant, being a
D corporate entity, was not a Muslim as explicitly envisaged by art. 121(1A) of the FC; (b) s. 28 of the 2008 Enactment stipulates that no Shariah Court decision could affect the rights or property of a non-Muslim; (c) the original cause of action against the first defendant arose from the breach of the 'survivorship clause'; (d) contract law was explicitly listed under the Federal
E List (List I, Ninth Schedule of the FC), hence, the opening of the account, being contractual in nature, was within the civil court's jurisdiction, and not the Shariah Court's; and (e) the plaintiff's claim was not based on hibah; and (ii) the issues should instead be referred to the Shariah Advisory Council of the Bank Negara Malaysia ('SAC') in accordance with the Central Bank of F Malaysia Act 2009 ('CBMA').

Held (allowing application in part):

(1) Shariah courts would not have the ultimate jurisdiction over disputes concerning the inheritance of testate or intestate property (a matter
G under the State List) when such disputes also involved probate and administration (a civil matter under the Federal List). While the Shariah courts may issue a sijil faraid to certify the beneficiaries and their shares/rights in the estate, the civil High Court was the forum for the granting of letters of administration and the handling of the H administration aspect therein. The decision of Jumaaton Dan Satu Lagi lwn. Raja Hizaruddin, as recognised by the Court of Appeal in Latifah Mat Zin v. Rosmawati Sharibun & Anor ('Latifah'), underscored the fact that even when Shariah principles were in question, the dispute must be determined by a civil court if a Federal matter was involved. The purpose of a civil court in such matter was to grant administration and I oversee the collection and distribution of assets. Should the funds ultimately be determined to be part of the estate, the civil court, as the administering court, after obtaining sijil faraid from the Shariah Court, must facilitate the proper distribution in accordance with the sijil faraid to its rightful recipients. (paras 35-40)

(2) The jurisdiction of the court should be determined by the nature of the relief sought. Since the plaintiff's original action was based on a breach of contract by the first defendant, it fell under civil jurisdiction. No Shariah question arose. In contractual disputes, the civil court was the determiner and not the Shariah Court. Thus, issue (i) should not be referred to the Shariah Court. (paras 44-47)

(3) The Federal Court's decision in Latifah ('Latifah (FC)') should be preferred and applied in the present case. Despite the plaintiff's claim being premised on contract law, the plaintiff via his affidavit had admitted that his claim for the monies was based on 'pemberian ikhlas' (sincere gift) from the late DYTM Tunku Malik. Considering that the meaning of 'pemberian ikhlas' in Islamic law was a form of gift or hibah, the plaintiff was bound by his own sworn statement. The determination of whether the plaintiff was beneficially entitled to the monies as a 'pemberian ikhlas' or hibah fell squarely within the jurisdiction of the Shariah Court, which was the competent forum to decide on the law of gift/hibah. (paras 62-64)

(4) As affirmed by Latifah (FC), survivorship clause in a joint account would merely entitle the survivor to receive the money and enable the bank to obtain a good discharge. It would not automatically confer beneficial ownership over the money to the survivor. The question of who would be beneficially entitled to the money was a separate matter, which was not the bank's concern. For a Muslim's estate, the determination of beneficial ownership, especially when there's an alleged hibah or when the funds were listed as part of the estate to be distributed according to faraid, the Islamic inheritance law and the law of gifts/hibah were applicable. These jurisdictional issues would necessitate 'double proceedings', one in the civil court and another in the Shariah Court, to achieve a final resolution and to avoid conflicting decisions. (paras 65-68)

(5) The second defendant was duty-bound to protect the rights of the lawful heirs of the late DYTM Tunku Malik, considering that the joint fixed deposit account had been inserted into the amended list of assets. However, the plaintiff still claimed for right over the said account, stating that it was a 'pemberian ikhlas' or hibah from the late DYTM Tunku Malik. Pursuant to s. 13(3)(b) of the 2008 Enactment, hibah falls within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Shariah Court. Since the parties who claimed entitlement over the monies were Muslims, the determination on the law of gifts/hibah could only be adjudicated by the Shariah Court. The civil court should honour such jurisdiction of the Shariah Court. Hence, issue (ii) must be referred to the Shariah Court. (paras 69-71)

(6) The first defendant, being a corporate entity, lacked the capacity to profess any religion and would fall outside the Shariah Court's jurisdiction. Any attempt to subject the first defendant to Shariah proceedings would therefore be unlawful and unconstitutional. (para 83)

(7) The core dispute in the present case was concerned with the interpretation, validity and applicability of the 'survivorship clause'. This fell squarely within the realm of banking and contract law, which were civil matters explicitly governed by the Federal List. Being a dispute concerning banking law, the validity and applicability of the 'survivorship clause' was an issue to be determined by the civil courts and not the Shariah Courts. As such, civil courts remained the competent forum for disputes even where Shariah principles were relevant, provided that the subject matter fell within the Federal jurisdiction. Hence, issue (iii) should not be referred to the Shariah Court. (paras 84, 87 & 92)

(8) The account involved conventional and not Islamic banking. Section 56 of the CBMA stipulates that reference to the SAC would only be confined to proceedings relating to Islamic financial business. The first defendant was not licensed under the Islamic Financial Services Act 2013. There was also nothing forwarded by the parties to indicate that the account was operated under the Islamic window of the first defendant. The real dispute in this case involved the application of the law of gift/hibah and the Islamic law of succession (which fell under State List) whereas SAC's statutory duty was confined to ascertainment of Islamic law for disputes concerning Islamic financial business. The SAC had no business in the present dispute. Therefore, the issues should not be referred to the SAC. (paras 94-98)

JUDGMENT

(Enclosure 129 – Notice of application by the second defendant to refer several questions of Islamic law (Shariah) to the Kedah Shariah High Court under art. 121(1A) of the Federal Constitution and/or s. 24A(1) of the Courts of Judicature Act 1964 and/or s. 13(3)(b) of the Shariah Court (Kedah Darul Aman) Enactment 2008 and/or r. 92, O. 4 of the Rules of Court 2012)

Johan Lee Kien How J:

Facts Of The Case

[1] This is an application filed by the second defendant in encl. 129 ("this application") to seek permission to refer several Shariah issues to the Kedah Shariah High Court. This referral is sought under art. 121 (1A) of the Federal Constitution and/or s. 24A(1) of the Courts of Judicature Act 1964 and/or s. 13(3)(b) of the Shariah Courts (Kedah Darul Aman) Enactment 2008 and/or under the inherent jurisdiction of the court pursuant to O. 92 r. 4 of the Rules of Court 2012.

[2] On 12 July 2011, Almarhum DYTM Tunku Haji Abdul Malik Ibni Almarhum Sultan Badlishah (the "late DYTM Tunku Malik"), at the age of 82 years old, opened a joint fixed deposit account (Account No: 5003413704) ("joint fixed deposit account") with the first defendant. The plaintiff was named as a joint account holder of that joint fixed deposit account.

[3] Less than a year after opening the account, on 5 March 2012, the late DYTM Tunku Malik was diagnosed with severe stage of dementia of Alzheimer's Type and severe brain atrophy, along with other serious medical conditions. A report from Hospital Sultanah Bahiyah on 6 December 2018 indicated a worsening dementia condition and a decline in memory.

[4] The plaintiff premised that the late DYTM Tunku Malik executed a letter of Hibah (gift) to give all trust monies/investment to the plaintiff and another person. However, the second defendant argued that this letter did not expressly include the joint fixed deposit account. The second defendant further averred that the plaintiff's claim for the money, asserted as "pemberian ikhlas" (sincere gift) from the late Tunku Malik in the plaintiff's affidavit, is essentially a claim for hibah.

[5] The second defendant further posits that the account was opened and the joint account mandate signed under the plaintiff's undue influence, given the late Tunku Malik's deteriorating mental health and lack of cognitive capacity to enter a contract.

[6] The late DYTM Tunku Malik passed away on 29 November 2015. On the same day, the Jemaah Pemangku Sultan Kedah issued a written instruction to all financiers and banks to freeze all accounts (personal or joint) belonging to the late DYTM Tunku Malik. This instruction was communicated to the first defendant on 30 November 2015.

[7] For nearly three years after the freezing of the account, the plaintiff remained silent and did not claim the monies in the joint fixed deposit account as his asset.

[8] On 26 June 2018, the second defendant, who is the late DYTM Tunku Malik's niece, was appointed as the administratrix of the late DYTM Tunku Malik's estate by the High Court of Alor Setar.

[9] On the same day of the second defendant's appointment, the plaintiff's solicitors demanded the first defendant to release the monies in the joint fixed deposit account to the plaintiff. The first defendant refused, citing the freeze instructions and stating that proceeds would only be released upon joint instructions from the plaintiff and the lawful administrator of the estate.

[10] The second defendant had later obtained a court order from the High Court of Alor Setar to include the joint fixed deposit account as part of the amended list of assets of the late DYTM Tunku Malik's estate.

[11] On 15 June 2020, the plaintiff filed this suit against the first and second defendant, claiming a declaration and order that the plaintiff is entitled to withdraw all monies in the account based on the survivorship clause.

[12] The second defendant then filed this application so that several specific issues can be referred to the Kedah Shariah High Court (collectively "these issues"):

(i) Whether the money in the Joint Fixed Deposit Account (Account No: 5003413704) held by the First Defendant (CIMB Bank Berhad) is included in the estate of Almarhum DYTM Tunku Haji Abdul Malik Ibni Almarhum Sultan Badlishah that needs to be distributed to the heirs according to Faraid and Islamic inheritance law;

(ii) Whether there was any valid form of gift (alang or pemberian) made by Almarhum DYTM Tunku Haji Abdul Malik Ibni Almarhum Sultan Badlishah to the Plaintiff regarding the money in the Joint Fixed Deposit Account (Account No: 5003413704) held by the First Defendant;

(iii) Whether the right of survivorship contained in the terms of opening the Joint Fixed Deposit Account by Almarhum DYTM Tunku Haji Abdul Malik Ibni Almarhum Sultan Badlishah and the Plaintiff applies to the estate of DYTM Tunku Haji Abdul Malik Ibni Almarhum Sultan Badlishah according to Shariah law.

[13] Apart from the above, the second defendant in this application moves this court to grant the following orders:

(i) that the order or decision by Kedah Shariah High Court be applied and enforced by this court in the present civil action;

(ii) that the full trial or the fixing of trial dates for the present action be stayed for a limited period pending disposal of Shariah proceedings; and

(iii) that the other pre-trial directions may be given by this court under O. 34 of Rules of Court 2012 in order to avoid any delay of the present legal action.

Submission By The Second Defendant

[14] The second defendant asserted that this application is made in good faith due to several reasons. First of all, there exists the jurisdictional necessity. The core dispute, particularly concerning the survivorship clause, involves the determination of Shariah issues, such as the law of gifts (hibah) and Islamic inheritance law (faraid), which civil courts do not have competent jurisdiction to decide. The second defendant cited the Court of Appeal case of Latifah Mat Zin v. Rosmawati Sharibun & Anor [2006] 3 CLJ 207; [2006] 4 MLJ 705 to support this point.

[15] Secondly, the plaintiff in our present case is clearly claiming beneficial entitlement to the funds based on the doctrine of survivorship and an alleged "pemberian ikhlas" (sincere gift) from the deceased. However, the second defendant contended that the survivorship clause does not automatically confer beneficial ownership.

[16] The second defendant also asserted that the funds in the joint account are part of the deceased's estate, which must be distributed according to faraid law. The second defendant has also obtained a court order to include the joint fixed deposit account as part of the amended list of asset of the late DYTM Tunku Malik's estate.

[17] Next, the second defendant raised the issue of incompetence of civil courts on Islamic Law. That is to say, civil court judges are generally not equipped to decide complex issues of Islamic jurisprudence, such as the validity of a hibah or whether a survivorship clause contravenes Shariah law. The Shariah High Court possesses special jurisdiction over matters like alang semasa hidup (gift during lifetime) and inheritance. To support, the second defendant referred to JRI Resources Sdn Bhd v. Kuwait Finance House (Malaysia) Bhd; President Of Association Of Islamic Banking Institutions Malaysia & Anor (Interveners) [2019] 5 CLJ 569.

[18] Furthermore, the second defendant argued that a referral to the Shariah Court is necessary to avoid conflicting decisions between the civil and Shariah courts. The decision from the Shariah Court can then be applied and enforced by the civil court to resolve the civil disputes, including issues of negligence and breach of contract. For this, the second defendant relied on the judgment of Mohamad Taupik Mohamad Nor & Yang Lain lwn. Siti Rahmah Mohd Noor & Yang Lain [2016] CLJU 1462; [2016] 1 LNS 1462 to support her argument.

[19] The second defendant submitted that allowing the referral will not prejudice the plaintiff or the first defendant. The first defendant, as a bank, is only acting as a stakeholder and would not need to be involved in the Shariah proceedings.

[20] According to the learned counsel for the second defendant, this application aims to expedite the disposal of this case by clarifying the Shariah issues first. The second defendant, as administratrix, has a duty to protect the rights of the deceased's lawful heirs under faraid law, especially given that one of the heirs is 94 years old and has yet to receive her entitlement.

Submission By The Plaintiff

[21] The gist of the plaintiff's submission is that the civil court, specifically the High Court, retains exclusive jurisdiction over the present matter.

[22] The plaintiff further submitted that the Shariah Court lacks the jurisdiction of these issues because the first defendant is a corporate entity and not a Muslim as explicitly envisaged by art. 121(1A) of the Federal Constitution ("the FC").

[23] Moreover, the Shariah Courts (Kedah Darul Aman) Enactment 2008, s. 24, also stipulates that no Shariah Court decision can affect the rights or property of a non-Muslim. The plaintiff heavily relied on the Apex Court's judgment of Indira Gandhi Mutho v. Pengarah Jabatan Agama Islam Perak & Ors And Other Appeals [2018] 3 CLJ 145 and few other authorities to support its submission.

[24] The plaintiff asserted that the original cause of action against the first defendant arose from the contractual terms agreed upon during the opening of the joint fixed deposit account.

[25] The plaintiff's claim is based on the first defendant's breach of the "survivorship clause" contained within the contract, which dictates that upon the death of one account holder, the balance should be given to the surviving holder.

[26] Contract law is explicitly listed under the Federal List (List I, Ninth Schedule of the Federal Constitution), placing it within the civil court's jurisdiction. Therefore, the opening of a joint account, being contractual in nature, does not fall under the Shariah Court's jurisdiction.

[27] The plaintiff explicitly clarified that their claim is not based on hibah (gift). The letter of hibah exhibited by the plaintiff was only meant to demonstrate that the late Tunku Malik had given other assets as gifts, not the joint fixed deposit account in question. The plaintiff's pleadings do not assert hibah as the basis of their claim for the joint account.

[28] Citing the judgment of Public Bank Bhd v. New Ace Digital Print Sdn Bhd & Anor [2019] 5 CLJ 1, learned counsel for the plaintiff asserted that contractual terms, especially a written survivorship clause, must be interpreted according to their plain meaning, and extrinsic evidence of subjective intent should be inadmissible if the terms are unambiguous. The plaintiff argued that the clear terms of the account application and mandate bind all parties and entitle the plaintiff to the funds.

Submission By The First Defendant

[29] The first defendant primarily opposed this application to refer Shariah questions to the Kedah Shariah High Court and to stay proceedings. Their core submissions focus on the civil court's exclusive jurisdiction over the dispute, the contractual nature of the claim, the prejudice caused by any stay of proceedings, and the limited role of Shariah Courts in conventional banking matters.

Findings And Decisions Of The Court

[30] After appraising the facts adduced by the parties through affidavits and the exhibits, and the submissions by learned counsels for all the parties, I partially allow this application, and order, that, only question (ii) of these issues is to be referred to Kedah Shariah High Court. Herein are my reasons.

[31] The crux issues to be determined by this court concerning this application revolve around the ownership and distribution of funds in a joint fixed deposit account, the applicability of a "survivorship clause", and the jurisdiction of the civil versus Shariah Courts over these matters. I shall discuss these issues separately.

Issue 1: Whether The Money In The Joint Fixed Deposit Account Held By The First Defendant Is Included In The Estate Of Late DYTM Tunku Malik That Needs To Be Distributed To The Heirs According To Faraid And Islamic Inheritance Law

[32] The second defendant's contention is that this issue/question falls squarely within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Shariah Court and is crucial in determining the beneficial ownership of the funds.

[33] In response, the plaintiff alleged that while the distribution of a Muslim's estate according to faraid is a matter for the Shariah Court, the broader issues of probate and administration fall under the Federal List and are within the jurisdiction of the civil courts. The purpose of a civil court in such matters is to grant administration and oversee the collection and distribution of assets.

[34] In other words, the mere involvement of Shariah principles does not automatically confer jurisdiction upon the Shariah Court, as the determination of legal disputes must be based on the subject matter and the applicable laws.

[35] I fully concur with learned counsel for the plaintiff that Shariah Courts do not have the ultimate jurisdiction over disputes concerning the inheritance of testate or intestate property (a matter under the State List) when such disputes also involve probate and administration (a civil matter under the Federal List).

[36] While the Shariah Court may issue a sijil faraid to certify the beneficiaries and their shares/rights in the estates, the civil High Court is the forum for granting letters of administration and the handling of the administration aspect there in. This position was articulated by the Shariah Court of Appeal in Jumaaton & Satu Lagi v. Raja Hizaruddin [1998] CLJU 329; [1998] 1 LNS 329; [1998] 6 MLJ 556 where at p. 561 Sheikh Ghazali CJ Shariah (WP) averred that:

> Sungguhpun Senarai 2 Jadual Kesembilan itu menyebut mengenai 'Hukum Syarak berhubung dengan mewaris harta berwasiat dan tidak berwasiat' dan 'pembahagian harta' apabila rujukan dibuat kepada Senarai 1 Senari Persekutuan Jadual Kesembilan itu ini tidak termasuk probet dan surat mentadbir pusaka. Perkara (e) perenggan (i) dalam Senarai Persekutuan itu menyebut bahawa Parlimen boleh membuat undang-undang antara lain mengenai 'perwarisan harta berwasiat dan tidak berwasiat, probet dan surat mentadbir kuasa'. Kemudian dalam bahagian

(ii) perkara (a) itu disebut 'Perkara yang tersebut dalam perenggan (1) tidak termasuk undang-undang diri orang-orang Islam berhubung dengan "pemberian atau perwarisan harta berwasiat dan tidak berwasiat". Ini bermakna undang-undang mengenai 'probet dan surat mentadbir harta' dimasukkan dalam Senarai Persekutuan dan bukan 'Senarai Negeri' dan oleh kerana itu Badan Perundangan Negeri dan Mahkamah Shariah tidak mempunyai kuasa atau bidang kuasa dalam perkara 'probet dan surat mentadbir harta' itu. Inilah sebab undang-undang mengenai 'probet dan surat mentadbir' bagi semua orang di Malaysia terdapat dalam Akta Probet dan Pentadbiran 1959.

Sungguhpun semua pihak dalam kes ini adalah orang Islam namun demikian kuasa untuk mentadbir harta pusaka telah dibuat oleh Mahkamah Tinggi (Sivil). Ini disebabkan oleh kerana perkara 'probet dan surat mentadbir pusaka' diletakkan di bawah senarai kuasa perundangan Persekutuan (Senarai I Jadual Kesembilan kepada Perlembagaan Malaysia) dan tidak dikecualikan bagi orang Islam. Oleh kerana itu, undang-undang mengenai probet dan pentadbiran pusaka terdapat dalam Akta Probet dan Pentadbiran 1959 … (emphasis added)

[37] This principle laid down in Jumaaton (supra) was also recognised by our Court of Appeal in Latifah Mat Zin (supra), where Abdul Aziz Mohamad JCA ruled:

[24] … The Shariah High Court, however, ruled that it did not have jurisdiction over the dispute. The Shariah Court of Appeal upheld the ruling. They took the view (at p 563C and G) that the matter of succession to or division and inheritance of the property of a deceased person involves probate and administration, which is not included in the matter of 'succession, testate and intestate' in Item 1 of the State List. Since probate and administration falls in the Federal List and not in the State List, it was held that the Shariah courts have no jurisdiction over the dispute.

(emphasis added)

[38] Therefore, the decision underscores the fact that even when Shariah principles are in question, the dispute must be determined by the civil courts if a federal matter is involved (See also Indira Gandhi Mutho (supra)).

[39] The purpose of a civil court in such matters is to grant administration and oversee the collection and distribution of assets. After all, the joint fixed deposit account has already been included in the amended list of assets of the late Tunku Malik's estate by an unchallenged High Court order dated 23 February 2020.

[40] Hence, should the funds ultimately be determined to be part of the estate, the civil court, as the administering court, would, after obtaining a sijil faraid from the Shariah Court, facilitate the proper distribution, in accordance with the sijil faraid to its rightful recipients.

[41] In the context of letters of administration that involve Muslims, the Apex Court in Latifah Mat Zin v. Rosmawati Sharibun & Anor [2007] 5 CLJ 253; [2007] 5 MLJ 101, could not be clearer when Abdul Hamid Mohamad FCJ (later CJ) laid down the role of Civil and Shariah courts in determining different questions in respect of their jurisdictions, as follows:

> [56] In the case of letters of administration (again I am only referring to non-small estates), an application is made to the civil High Court for the grant of a letter of administration. When the letter of administration is obtained, the administrator is appointed, and in case of an estate of a Muslim, the administrator will obtain a 'Sijil Faraid' from the Shariah Court which states who are the beneficiaries and their respective shares, in accordance with Islamic law … (emphasis added)

[42] This approach avoids jurisdictional overlap while ensuring proper Islamic inheritance principles are applied at the distribution stage.

[43] Above all, the plaintiff asserted that the original cause of action against the first defendant arose from the contractual terms agreed upon during the opening of the joint fixed deposit account, and not hibah.

[44] As submitted by the plaintiff, the jurisdiction of the court should be determined by the nature of the relief sought. (See Siti Hasnah Vangarama Abdullah v. Tun Dr Mahathir Mohamad (As The President Of Perkim) & Ors [2012] 7 CLJ 845).

[45] Since the plaintiff's original action is based on a breach of contract by the first defendant, it falls under civil jurisdiction, and thus, no Shariah question arises.

[46] All these authorities are clear that in contractual disputes, the civil court is the determiner and not Shariah Court. Thus, I hold that this question No. 1 need not be referred to the Shariah Court.

[47] The above judgment has reinforced the principle that civil and Shariah courts operate as co-equal and independent judicial systems within their respective constitutionally defined jurisdictions.

Issue 2: Whether There Was Any Valid Form Of Gift (Alang Or Pemberian) Made By The Late DYTM Tunku Malik To The Plaintiff Regarding The Money In The Joint Fixed Deposit Held By The First Defendant

[48] The second defendant asserted that the civil court lacks competent jurisdiction to determine issues related to gifts (hibah) and Islamic inheritance law (faraid). The second defendant claimed that civil court judges should refrain from deciding complex issues of Islamic jurisprudence (See JRI Resourcess (supra)).

[49] They further argued that the Shariah Court is the appropriate forum for such matters, citing art. 121(1A) of the FC and s. 13(3)(b) of the Shariah Courts (Kedah Darul Aman) Enactment 2008.

[50] Specifically, s. 13(3)(b) of the Shariah Courts (Kedah Darul Aman) Enactment 2008 confers jurisdiction to the Shariah High Court, reads as follows:

> 13. (b) dalam bidang kuasa malnya, mendengar dan memutuskan semua tindakan dan prosiding dalam mana semua pihak adalah orang Islam dan yang berhubung dengan –
> (i) pertunangan, perkahwinan, ruju', perceraian, pembubaran perkahwinan (fasakh), nusyuz, atau pemisahan kehakiman (mufaraqah) atau apa-apa perkara yang berkaitan dengan perhubungan di antara suami isteri;
> (vi) alang semasa hidup, atau penyelesaian yang dibuat tanpa balasan yang memadai dengan wang atau nilaian wang, oleh seseorang Islam; (emphasis added)

[51] The second defendant argued that the issue of "alang semasa hidup" (gift during lifetime), which is synonymous with "pemberian semasa hidup" or hibah, is a crucial Shariah question that must be referred to the Kedah Shariah High Court.

[52] The second defendant's counsel has also referred to the authentic Kamus Dewan, (4th edn) published by Dewan Bahasa dan Pustaka to establish that the word "alang" means, "hadiah, pemberian" in Bahasa Melayu. From the above, it is clear that Shariah High Court shall have competent jurisdiction to hear and decide issue pertaining to "alang semasa hidup" or "pemberian semasa hidup" or better known as "hibah".

[53] The second defendant pointed out that the plaintiff, in his own affidavit, expressly acknowledged that his claim to the money was premised on a "pemberian ikhlas" (sincere gift) from the deceased, DYTM Tunku Haji Abdul Malik. On this basis, the second defendant construed the term "pemberian ikhlas" as a form of hibah under Islamic law and contended that the plaintiff is bound by his own sworn statement and is now precluded from taking a contradictory position.

[54] Accordingly, learned counsel for the second defendant submitted that the question whether the plaintiff is beneficially entitled to the money by virtue of "pemberian ikhlas" properly falls within the jurisdiction of the Shariah Court.

[55] In response, the plaintiff contended that the second defendant has misunderstood the nature of the plaintiff's claim and the relevance of the "alang semasa hidup" concept to the joint fixed deposit account.

[56] The plaintiff clarified that his claim is not based on hibah regarding the joint fixed deposit account. The plaintiff further asserted that the letter of hibah dated 21 September 2012 (See exh. WB1, encl. 140), cited by the second defendant, refers to other properties and was merely adduced to demonstrate that the deceased had previously given gifts to the plaintiff due to their close relationship, not as evidence that the joint account itself was a hibah.

[57] In other words, the plaintiff reiterated that his lawsuit is fundamentally about the breach of contractual terms, specifically the survivorship clause, by the first defendant and hence, matters of contract fall under the Federal List of the Federal Constitution and are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the civil courts.

[58] The first defendant, citing Public Bank Bhd (supra), averred that the survivorship clause is a written contractual term and its interpretation, validity, and enforceability are matters of contract law. Hence, the clause grants operational access to the survivor and enables the bank to obtain a good discharge upon payment, but it does not determine beneficial ownership. The question of beneficial ownership is a separate matter between claimants and the surviving account holder, not the bank.

[59] On this, I fully concur with the second defendant that Public Bank Bhd (supra) should be distinguished from this application, for two main reasons.

[60] Firstly, the Public Bank Bhd (supra) case did not involve any application of Shariah law on matters such as the law of gift (hibah) or Islamic law of succession (faraid).

[61] Secondly, the Public Bank Bhd (supra) case solely involved corporations and non-Muslims. In contrast, the current case involves Muslim parties (the plaintiff and the late DYTM Tunku Malik) regarding the beneficial ownership of funds, necessitating the consideration of Islamic law.

[62] Instead, it is the finding of this court that the Federal Court's decision in Latifah Mat Zin (supra) should be preferred and applied to the present case.

[63] Despite the plaintiff's claim being premised on contract law,as highlighted by the second defendant, the plaintiff himself, in his affidavit, admitted that his claim for the money was based on a "pemberian ikhlas" (sincere gift) from the late DYTM Tunku Malik. Since "pemberian ikhlas" means a form of gift or hibah in Islamic law, the plaintiff is bound by his own sworn statement. He cannot blow hot and cold at the same time.

[64] Therefore, the determination of whether the plaintiff is beneficially entitled to the money as a "pemberian ikhlas" or hibah falls squarely within the jurisdiction of the Shariah Court, which is competent to decide on the law of gift.

[65] This indeed aligns with the principle affirmed in Latifah Mat Zin (Court of Appeal, later affirmed by the Federal Court), that a survivorship clause in a joint account merely entitles the survivor to receive the money and enables the bank to obtain a good discharge.

[66] However, it does not automatically confer beneficial ownership of the money to the survivor. The question of who is beneficially entitled to the money is a separate matter, not the bank's concern.

[67] For a Muslim's estate, the determination of beneficial ownership, especially when there's an alleged hibah or when the funds are listed as part of the estate to be distributed according to faraid, requires the application of Islamic inheritance law and the law of gifts.

[68] I am guided by the ratio of Abdul Hamid Mohamad FCJ (later CJ) in Latifah Mat Zin (supra) that such jurisdictional issues might necessitate "double proceedings", one in the civil court and another in the Shariah Court, to achieve a final resolution and avoid conflicting decisions:

> [74] So, it is very clear that the determination whether the assets in question had been given as a valid "hibah" by the deceased to the appellant is a matter that falls within the jurisdiction of the shariah court. The Court of Appeal was right on this point.
> [80] As a result, jurisdictional problems that had not been envisaged have arisen. Some require double proceedings, one in the civil court and another in the shariah court before a final decision may be made. This causes delay and incurs unnecessary expenses. Others are outside the jurisdiction of both courts. These are not matters that the courts can solve as the courts owe their jurisdiction to statutes. It is for the legislature to step in, to decide as a matter of policy what should be the solution and legislate accordingly. (emphasis added)

[69] In our present case, the joint fixed deposit account of the late DYTM Tunku Malik has been inserted in the amended list of asset of the late DYTM Tunku Malik's estate. Hence, the second defendant is duty bound to protect the rights of the lawful heirs of the late DYTM Tunku Malik. Yet, the plaintiff is claiming his right over the joint fixed deposit account saying it is "pemberian ikhlas", namely, hibah from the late DYTM Tunku Malik.

[70] It is undeniable that hibah is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Shariah Court. Section 13(3)(b) of the Shariah Courts (Kedah Darul Aman) Enactment 2008 quoted earlier is crystal clear on this. Also, I am guided by the latest Federal Court's decision in Dahlia Dhaima Abdullah v. Majlis Agama Islam Selangor & Another Appeal [2024] 5 CLJ 855; [2025] 1 MLJ 334 where Abang Iskandar PCA held:

> [170] First, my reason for saying this is that the decisions of the Shariah Courts must be recognised and respected consistent with our own Federal Constitution that do recognise the hierarchy, role and function of the Shariah Courts. In fact, the civil courts have long acknowledged this. This is illustrated by the cases decided by the former Federal Court Justice Mohd Zawawi Salleh and former Chief Justice of Malaysia Abdul Hamid Mohamed when they were

A at the Court of Appeal. The first case is Syarifah Nooraffyzza Wan Hosen v. Director Of Jabatan Agama Islam Sarawak & Ors [2018] 3 CLJ 620, where it is said:

> [25] We are of the view that Shariah Courts and civil courts form two separate legal system. We agree with the view expressed by Salbiah Ahmed in her article entitled: "Islam in Malaysia: Constitutional and Human Rights Perspectives", Muslim World Journal of Human Rights 2, No. 1 (2005), when she asserts that:
> State Shariah Courts are not Courts inferior to the Federal Courts as the term "inferior court" is understood in terms of appeal and judicial review by superior courts over inferior courts. The State Shariah Courts are in a separate hierarchy to that of the federal civil courts. There is no right of appeal from the State Shariah Courts to the federal civil courts. There is no power of judicial review by the federal high court over the State Shariah Courts. (emphasis added)

[71] In short, since the parties involved here are Muslims (plaintiff and second defendant both of whom are claiming entitlement over the monies held in the joint account), the determination on the law of gifts/hibah can only be adjudicated by the Shariah High Court, being court constituted under the State law as a court of competent jurisdiction under our Federal Constitution and being the court referred such jurisdiction by valid laws of the land. The civil court must honour such jurisdiction of the Shariah Court and recognise the relevant decision from the Shariah Court on point. Therefore, it is my finding that question/issue No. 2 (concerning hibah) must be reffered to the Shariah Court.

Issue 3: Whether The Right Of Survivorship Contained In The Terms Of Opening The Joint Fixed Deposit Account By The Late DYTM Tunku Malik And The Plaintiff Applies To The Estate Of The Late DYTM Tunku Malik According To Shariah Law

[72] The core of the plaintiff's claim and the first defendant's defence, revolves around the contractual interpretation and effect of the survivorship clause within the banking agreement.

[73] It is trite that banking and contract law are matters listed under the Federal List of the Ninth Schedule of the Federal Constitution and fall within the exclusive jurisdiction of the civil court.

[74] Crucially, it was undisputed that the first defendant, CIMB Bank Berhad, is a corporate entity registered under the Malaysian Companies Act. A corporate entity is incapable of professing any religion, and therefore, cannot be subjected to Shariah Court jurisdiction.

[75] While the second defendant argued that the survivorship clause may contravene Shariah inheritance principles, the jurisdiction of the Shariah Courts are explicitly limited to having jurisdiction only over persons professing the religion of Islam. Section 24 of the Shariah Court (Kedah Darul Aman) Enactment 2008 expressly states that no decision of the Shariah Court can involve any rights or property of a non-Muslim. Thus, subjecting the first defendant to the Shariah proceedings would be unlawful and unconstitutional.

[76] This principle has been consistently affirmed by the Federal Court, holding that if any party is a non-Muslim, the Shariah Court has no jurisdiction over the case, even if the subject matter might fall within its general purview.

[77] The Federal Court in Subashini Rajasingam v. Saravanan Thangathoray & Other Appeals [2008] 2 CLJ 1; [2008] 2 MLJ 147 could not be clearer when Nik Hashim FCJ held at [95] that:

> … before a Shariah Court may concern a subject matter that is within the jurisdiction of the Shariah Courts, the Shariah Courts will have no jurisdiction in respect of the case if the parties, or any of the parties, is not a Muslim, because exercising jurisdiction in the case will necessarily involve exercising jurisdiction over the non-Muslim parties or party, which jurisdiction the Shariah Courts are denied. (emphasis added)

[78] This principle was later reaffirmed by Iki Putra Mubarrak v. Kerajaan Negeri Selangor & Anor [2021] 3 CLJ 465; [2021] 2 MLJ 323, when Abang Iskandar CJ Sabah and Sarawak (later PCA) emphasised that the Shariah Court only has power over cases where all parties are Muslims:

> [63] … So, to take the example given earlier, if one of the parties is a non-Muslim, the shariah court does not have jurisdiction over the case, even if the subject matter falls within its jurisdiction.
> (emphasis added)

[79] For this purpose, corporate entities are considered incapable of professing a religion, as clarified by the Court of Appeal in Jabatan Agama Islam Wilayah Persekutuan & Ors v. Berjaya Books Sdn Bhd & Ors [2015] 3 CLJ 461; [2015] 3 MLJ 65 as follows:

> [27] (h) (iv) … There is no 'personal' law of the first respondent as it is a creature of statute and does not profess any religion. Only a natural person can profess a religion …
> [31] (f) … no action whatsoever can be taken against the first respondent as it is a corporate entity and incapable of professing a religion. The action taken against the first respondent was unlawful …

[80] Based on the above, a corporate entity registered under the Companies Act is incapable of professing a religion. The Court of Appeal ruling actually reaffirms the position stated by the High Court in Potensi Bernas Sdn Bhd v. Datu Badaruddin Datu Mustapha [2009] 8 CLJ 573 as follows:

> [16] There is no dispute that the plaintiff company consists of both Muslim and non-Muslim shareholders. In fact, the majority shareholder is a non-Muslim. The defendant's contention that the Shariah High Court has jurisdiction over the plaintiff is based solely on the fact that Datu Amir Kahar, a shareholder in the company is a Muslim. This argument is untenable. Clearly the property is not the personal property of Datu Amir Kahar. It is not even registered in his name. It belongs to the company which, being a creature of statute does not profess any religion. Only natural persons can profess a religion. Therefore, the injunction order restraining the plaintiff from dealing with the property is not only manifestly unjust to the non-Muslim shareholders of the plaintiff but is also null and void for want of jurisdiction. (emphasis added)

[81] Hence, the above reasoning of the Court of Appeal is particularly pertinent, as it establishes that legal entities such as corporations do not possess religious identities and, consequently, cannot fall within the ambit of religious legal frameworks.

[82] Besides, the recent Federal Court majority decision in SIS Forum (Malaysia) & Anor v. Jawatankuasa Fatwa Negeri Selangor & Ors [2025] 7 CLJ 179, albeit concerning corporation/society in holding that the Shariah Court only has jurisdiction over natural person, has further confirmed this.

[83] In applying the principles from the cited authorities to the present case, it is clear that the first defendant, being a corporate entity incorporated under the Companies Act, lacks the capacity to profess any religion. As such, it falls outside the jurisdiction of the Shariah Court. Any attempt to subject the first defendant to Shariah proceedings would therefore be both unlawful and unconstitutional.

[84] The plaintiff and the first defendant also premised that, to which I agree, the dispute in this case primarily involves civil matter (banking and contract law), not Islamic law. The core dispute concerns the interpretation, validity, and applicability of the "survivorship clause" in the joint fixed deposit account. This falls squarely within the realm of banking and contract law, which are civil matters explicitly governed by the Federal List (List I, Ninth Schedule of the Federal Constitution).

[85] The High Court in Arab-Malaysian Finance Bhd v. Taman Ihsan Jaya Sdn Bhd & Ors; (Koperasi Seri Kota Bukit Cheraka Bhd (Third Party) & And Other Cases [2009] 1 CLJ 419; [2008] 5 MLJ 631 (note that the Court of Appeal had later overruled the other decision of this case) had affirmed that banking matters fall under the Federal List when Abdul Wahab Patail J held that:

> [3] The introduction of Islamic financing in Malaysia is complicated by this country's constitutional arrangements. Article 74 of the Federal Constitution of Malaysia provides that finance, including banking, moneylending, pawnbrokers, control of credit, as well as trade, commerce and industry are subject matters within the federal list, while matters relating to the religion of Islam are within the states list. Cases involving the former are within the jurisdiction of the civil courts, while those involving the latter, but only so far as it concerns the matters in para 1 of the states list in Schedule 9, are within the jurisdiction of the Shariah Courts.

[4] This jurisdictional limitation in respect of the states and the Shariah Courts means that cases involving Islamic financing in Malaysia remain within the Federal legislative jurisdiction, and cases relating thereto are brought in the civil courts. No legislation in the form of Islamic laws has been made for trade and financing based upon Islamic principles. The only provision is that there be no element involved which is not approved by the religion of Islam. (emphasis added)

[86] This ruling reinforces the constitutional position that banking law and disputes including matters related to Islamic financing, falls exclusively within the legislative competence of the Federal Government and the jurisdiction of the civil courts.

[87] Accordingly, any dispute concerning banking law must be adjudicated by the civil courts, and the Shariah Courts have no jurisdiction over such matters. Additionally, the first defendant submitted that the validity and applicability of the "survivorship clause" is an issue to be determined by the civil courts and not the Shariah Courts.

[88] The first defendant also suggested that the "survivorship clause" is not applicable to Muslims. Hence, the first defendant contends that the determination of a "survivorship clause" falls within the realm of contract law, which is also a matter of federal jurisdiction.

[89] The plaintiff's claim against the first defendant is based on the breach of contractual terms, specifically that the first defendant has failed to adhere to the survivorship clause by freezing the account. The terms of the contract stipulate that upon the death of one account holder, the balance should be paid to the survivor.

[90] The "survivorship clause" is a written contractual term that must be interpreted according to its plain meaning under contract law. It merely grants operational access and enables the bank to obtain a good discharge by paying the survivor; it does not conclusively determine beneficial ownership. The issue of rightful beneficial ownership is a separate question, not the concern of the bank or banking law, and is to be determined in separate proceedings between the claimant and the surviving account holder (See Latifah Mat Zin (supra) and Public Bank Bhd (supra)).

[91] Furthermore, the Court of Appeal in Pathmanathan Krishnan v. Indira Gandhi Mutho & Other Appeals [2016] 1 CLJ 911; [2016] 4 MLJ 455 unequivocally held that where Shariah principles are engaged but the subject matter falls outside the jurisdiction of the Shariah Court, the civil courts retain exclusive jurisdiction. As per Balia Yusof JCA:

A

> [153] (b) … If the subject matter is not within the Shariah Court but Shariah principles are involved, the civil courts are the sole arbiter under the Federal Constitution. For example, Islamic banking matter, probate and administration matter, etc … (emphasis added)

[92] Be that as it may, the above case authorities demonstrate that civil B courts remain the competent forum for disputes even where Shariah principles are relevant, provided that the subject matter falls within Federal jurisdiction, such as banking, contract law or probate and administration. I thus hold that this issue No. 3 is not to be referred to the Shariah Court.

Reference To The Shariah Advisory Council (SAC) Of Bank Negara C Malaysia?

[93] At paras. 51 and 52 of plaintiff's affidavit in reply at encl. 140, the plaintiff has made an alternative argument that the encl. 129 should be dismissed on the basis that any reference on Shariah question should be channeled to the Shariah Advisory Council (SAC) of Bank Negara Malaysia D (BNM) under Central Bank Act of Malaysia 2009 (CBMA).

[94] Regarding this alternate argument, I agree with the second defendant's submission that the plaintiff's contention is untenable as the fixed deposit joint account in our present case involve conventional banking and not Islamic banking. Hence, the SAC is not the proper forum. E

[95] Section 56 of CBMA clearly provides that:

> (1) Where in any proceedings relating to Islamic financial business before any court or arbitrator any question arises concerning a Shariah matter, the court or the arbitrator, as the case may be, shall (a) take into F consideration any published rulings of the Shariah Advisory Council; or
> (b) refer such question to the Shariah Advisory Council for its ruling.
> (2) Any request for advice or a ruling of the Shariah Advisory Council under this Act or any other law shall be submitted to the secretariat. (emphasis added)

G

[96] The above provision stipulates clearly that reference to the SAC is only confined to proceedings relating to Islamic financial business. In our present case, this court takes judicial notice that the first defendant is licensed as a conventional bank under Financial Services Act 2013 (FSA) and not under Islamic Financial Services Act 2013 (IFSA). There is also nothing H forwarded by the parties to indicate that this joint fixed deposit account is operated under the Islamic window of the first defendant. As such, SAC shall have no jurisdiction over conventional banking business.

[97] In any event, I am in full agreement with the second defendant that I the real dispute in our present case involves application of law of gift/hibah and Islamic law of succession (which fall under State List) whereas SAC's statutory duty is confined to ascertainment of Islamic law for disputes concerning Islamic financial business. Thus, again the SAC of BNM has no business in this present dispute.

[98] Based on the above, plaintiff's argument to refer these issues to the SAC of BNM must be rejected as the SAC, nor any civil courts to that extend, cannot be permitted to encroach, or usurp the role of Shariah Court in determining law of gift and Muslim's inheritance law. The ratio of Abang Iskandar CJ Sabah and Sarawak (later PCA) in Iki Putra (supra) concerning the sanctity of the Shariah Court is authoritative on this.

Conclusion

[99] I hereby partially allow this application, in order to strike a balance between respecting the distinct and equal jurisdiction of the Shariah Courts on matters of Islamic personal law, particularly hibah, and maintaining the civil court's clear jurisdiction over federal matters such as banking and contract law.

[100] The determination of issue No. 2, by the Shariah Court, that is, whether the monies in the joint fixed deposit account were a valid hibah will be crucial in ascertaining the beneficial ownership of the funds, will assist this court in its final judgment on the plaintiff's claim and the second defendant's counterclaim.

[101] To sum up, out of the three questions proposed by the second defendant, I only allow and order that the second question concerning the hibah be referred to the Shariah Court for its determination. The further proceeding of this case is hereby stayed pending the outcome over there. Once the case in the Shariah Court is adjudicated, the proceeding in our present case would resume and this court shall determine the entire case through a full trial conducted thereafter. The issues concerning survivorship and the beneficial ownership of the money in the joint fixed deposit account and to whom the first defendant shall release the money in the joint fixed deposit account would be determined thereafter.
